Forex aka Foreign Exchange or Forex currency exchange is the largest and most liquid market in the world today. With a daily volume of over 70 billion dollars, it makes this industry one of the most potentially profitable in the world of finances.

Trading currencies, as in most financial transactions, involves an element of risk as speculation is indeed the underlying driving force, but the risks involved with speculative movements are milder than those in other financial market.

Established in 1971, the Foreign Exchange Market did away with "Fixed" currency exchange and replaced it with the "floating" of currencies determined by market forces such as demand and supply. In one sweeping movement, it also eliminated any attempt to subvert currency market by institutions looking to influence the market by external means.

Through a network of currencies electronically linked throughout the world, the value of currencies fluctuates on a frequent basis, prompting Forex Traders to speculate as to the forecasted values of particular currencies in the hope of trading one for another for a profit.

This web of sophisticated computer network is becoming so advanced that Forex Trading is no longer reserved for central banks and or large financial conglomerates. Indeed, armed with personal computers, at home traders are discovering the financial possibilities that this market offers.

Forex is available 24 hours a day and with the right tools, more and more individual traders are able to discover the enormous potential of this profitable industry. Whilst there are certainly risks involved, Forex is in fact much more predictable than stock trading and has been shown by various studies to provide more consistent and profitable trends for traders.

Forex Exchange Market speculation provides the biggest potential of profits of any legal system today. Driven by international forces such as political upheaval, war and various other world instabilities, currencies have a tendency to fluctuate.

Forecasting the extent to which currencies will fluctuate allows pertinent traders to speculate and thus make substantial profits. For the competent forex trader with a knowledge and understanding of market values and analysis, this market makes for an extremely profitable industry.
