

Teak Is The Long Lasting Patio Champion

If you are currently considering purchasing outdoor furniture do your research and choose carefully. An important item to consider are the elements that your patio furniture will be exposed to. When you want a long lasting set of furniture, you can't go wrong if you choose teak outdoor furniture. Teak furniture is considered as one of the most popular choices of furniture to be placed outdoors.

Teak outdoor patio furniture is rated highly for its durability and hardness. This hardwood has a beautiful grain, deep color and presentation. These all combine to make it a joy to own. Teak is such a wonderful product partly due to the resin oil that is naturally in the wood. It helps to keep it resistant to water, the drying effects of the sun along with repelling insects. What more could you ask from your furniture?

Teak has silica in it. Silica is an element that gives teak outdoor furniture some of its durability. It helps to prevent rotting, deforming and warping. When you first purchase your teak outdoor furniture it begins with a warm golden color. As it weathers in the elements of the outdoors, it will then move to nice gray color. This gives it character like an old friend. Not to worry; The color change in no way effects this champions durability.

One of the best and most obvious ways to begin your purchase of teak outdoor furniture is to look to see if the wood already has any cracks or chips in it. If you find any breakage than it is a sign that the furnitures durability is compromised. Much wood damage begins with just these sorts of blemishes. So you want to be wary to find teak outdoor furniture that is naturally sealed and has not chips or cracks or other blemishes.

You also need to be sure that the teak outdoor furniture you intend to buy is wholly made of teak. Some manufacturers may insert a different kind of wood in some places far from the discerning eye. It is best to inspect the furniture for wood that may look different (different wood grain, colors and texture) from the rest before you buy it and when it is delivered to your home.

Teak is just like any other tree and it has knots. If you notice your teak outdoor furniture that you intend to buy has high level of knots than consider the long term fact that the knot is a point of vulnerability where decay can start.

Speak to your teak outdoor furniture supplier. Find out how the teak is dried. You want to purchase teak that has been kiln dried. This is best as it eliminates warping and cracking. If the tag or ad says air dried or sun dried wood you will find that it is a lesser quality teak outdoor furniture even if the wood appears to be of higher quality. Since kiln drying is the most thorough method of drying the wood, any other technique is inferior.

Teak has an outstanding reputation for quality and hardness. But as you consider your purchase of teak outdoor furniture please note that not all teak is made of high quality teak. By applying the pointers I have laid out here in this article you are well on your way to choosing the right kind of teak furniture for your patio needs.

Your outdoor patio furniture should last for a long time. You are making a major investment in your home as well as in your back yard patio plan. Teak makes a wonderful addition to any outdoor landscaping long range planning.
